“ I am so sorry to hear about Lyman. I have many special memories of Lyman and Sue living across the street from my father, Zeb Chaney, on Chula Vista in El Dorado. When my son, Eric, was little he would go across the street and visit with them and Sue always had a delicious treat for him. Lyman was a kind, gentle man and a special friend to my father.

My sincere condolences to the Maloch family.

“ Mr. Maloch was a kind hearted father figure to me, treating me much like he did his own sons, my very good friends in El Dorado. On an outing to Caddo Gap, me with a new fly rod trying in vain to flip the line out more than 15 feet from the old bridge, Mr. Maloch stepped up saying "let me show you" explaining in detail every motion as he gently laid the lure "way out" near a small snag and immediately hooks a nice sunfish. After playing it in, he handed me the rod saying "Now that's how you do it!" us both laughing and me marveling at how skilled Lyman was as a fisherman.....later as we walked off the old low water bridge, me still praising his fishing skill, Lyman offered "Leroy, it is better to be lucky than skilled; I showed you how to cast a fly but how to be lucky, well, you'll just have to learn that on your own!" Now, after all these years, I think I know what he meant.....maturing, growing older, wiser, having faith in God and Jesus as he certainly did, these don't necessarily change our luck but certainly teach us how to deal positively with all things....and that's sort of being lucky.
